

One of the city's oldest neighborhoods still intact, Grandview Heights was built as an extension of Palm Beach Heights from around 1910 to 1925. Almost all of Palm Beach Heights and half of Grandview Heights was demolished in 1989 to make way for the proposed Downtown-Uptown project, which remains undeveloped. The neighborhood became a West Palm Beach historic district in 1995 and was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1999.

Grandview Heights In recent years, residents rallied to stop random demolition of neighborhood homes. And they banded together to chase drug dealers and prostitutes from the neighborhood. New investors are helping bring back the neighborhood, which has one of the city's best collection of early craftsman-style bungalows, as well as some modest, Mediterranean revival-style homes.

The Grandview Heights neighborhood was established in 1910 and its first residents were ministers, downtown shopkeepers and the craftsmen who built the luxury hotels of Palm Beach. Most historic homes in the neighborhood were completed by 1925.

The neighborhood became a West Palm Beach historic district in 1995 and was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1999. April 17, 2011 will celebrate 2011 centennial anniversary this upcoming year! (See Home Tour)

The Grandview Heights neighborhood today is an eclectic mixture of history, architecture, with a dry cleaner, real estate offices, vet, day care, Churches, park, apartments, condos, and is known for its charm and diversity.